7. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below :

There are in the world some 3,000 different languages and dialects. This did not matter in the Middle Ages, when communications between the different parts of the globe were slow and difficult and when, in Europe at least, all educated men spoke Latin. Things have changed completely in our time. While few men can now speak Latin, the radio and telegraph have made it possible to talk directly between continents, and a journey which might have taken several weary months can now be achieved in a few hours by air. It is not surprising, then, that men have increasingly felt the need for a common language, and during the last century various solutions of the problem have been put forward.

The first of these was the creation of a completely artificial tongue, quite unconnected with any existing language. Although such a tongue might be difficult for people to learn, it at least had the advantage that everybody started on an equal footing. The second solution was the invention of a synthetic language based on natural languages, but without their numerous irregularities. Such languages as Esperanto, Volapuk and Interlingua belong to this category and since they are related to existing languages, are easier to learn for European speakers.

The two remaining solutions to the problem of international language are either to adopt as a world auxiliary some existing language already spoken by a large number of people or peoples (such languages as French, Spanish or Russian would be suitable), or to create a simplified version of one of these languages, in which the vocabulary and grammatical forms would be reduced to a minimum. An example of this is "Basic English."

P.T.O.

It is most unlikely that the governments of the world will ever formally agree on an international auxiliary language, but mean while, whether we like it or not, there are signs that English is gradually becoming accepted as a second language by a majority of people all over the world.

- (i) Make a précis of the above passage. 6
- (ii) Why was the need for a common language not felt in the middle ages ?
- (iii) What has caused the recent demand for a common language ?
- (iv) What solutions have been suggested in the paragraph to the problem of a common language ? 2 x 3
